

Resort: A Poem

When Patricia Hampl's first book of poems, Woman Before an Aquarium, appeared in 1978, Choice called it a generous . . . first collection, and Virginia Quarterly Review characterized her work as a poetry of accumulated details, strikingly presented. Now, after the success of her brilliant prose memoir, A Romantic Education, which won a Houghton Mifflin Literary Fellowship, Hampl has taken her poetry a step further in her new collection, Resort. The classical themes of beauty and love, loss and memory have always formed the core of Hampl's work. Here, they are treated in a series of shorter poems and then gathered powerfully into the long title poem of the collection. Set in a small, tumbledown cabin on the North Shore of Lake Superior, Resort follows the season of summer as Hampl explores a period of solitude following a loss, employing as a touchstone the image of the wild rose as it blooms and withers. In essence a poem about healing oneself through paying attention to the world outside, Resort has been called by poet Sandra McPherson major, richly entangled, ebullient . . . all of a sudden my favorite long poem.
